“Characterizing measles brain entry and spread using spatially-resolved RNA-seq”

Our goal is to understand the dynamics of rapidly-evolving populations, especially viruses evolving within their hosts and solid tumors progressing to malignancy. In particular, we are characterizing how spatial organization shapes these evolutionary outcomes, and developing approaches to leverage spatial data to better understand evolutionary histories.